Dear Andrew (and the whole ERS Council),

Resolution 1 - Building blocks for a stronger campaign: 2010 and beyond

I am a passionate supporter of electoral reform. I would like to see the Single Transferable Vote adopted for all major public UK elections. To get us there, we are going to have to use all resources at our disposal, and a variety of strategies; including robust and high profile public campaigning.

That is why I strongly back the resolution “the building blocks for a stronger campaign in 2010 and beyond”. I would like to see the Electoral Reform Society implement the recommendations and take on board at the highest levels the spirit of the resolution. Public campaigning and outreach work should be integral to all that the Society does.

I believe that we will only be able to win a referendum on electoral reform (whether on election day in 2010 or at a future date) if we have done the necessary groundwork amongst the public first. That work needs to gear up now, as a core aim of the campaign to secure a referendum in the first place.

This is why greater emphasis on activism, outreach and campaigning matters to me:
